FOREWORD

As part of its assigned non-materiel research responsibilities in support of the Department of the Army's Special Warfare mission, the Special Operations Research Office (SORO) operates a system for citing and cataloging references to published materials which are relevant and important to SORO's research activities in psychological operations and unconventional warfare.

In response to numerous requests from Army personnel and agencies for guidance to the literature, the Department of the Army has requested SORO to prepare reference bibliographies for general Army use in psychological operations and unconventional warfare. A first reference volume, entitled Psychological Operations Bibliography, was published in May 1960. This present volume is Part I of the bibliography on unconventional warfare. Part II, covering the field variously called "counter-guerrilla warfare," "counter-insurgency warfare," or "operations against irregular warfare," will be published subsequently. (An interim version, nonselective, of this unconventional warfare bibliography was published in March 1961 because of urgent field requirements.) It is anticipated that the bibliographies will be up-dated at periodic intervals.

SORO's bibliographic system, primarily set up to meet research needs, is continually being refined in order to insure comprehensive coverage of literature as it is published and to improve information selection, codification, storage, and retrieval. As a corollary to this effort, two changes from SORO's earlier bibliographies, namely presenting only selected entries and classifying the entries according to a subject matter format (as explained in the Introduction) have been introduced in this bibliography in order to improve its usefulness to the general reader.

Users of the bibliography are urged to read carefully the Introduction, which gives instructions for finding references to topics of their interest quickly and easily. When used in this manner, the bibliography provides Army personnel with time-saving guidance to many of the important unclassified sources of information on unconventional warfare--a field which has been receiving increasing emphasis.

INTRODUCTION

Unconventional warfare by United States Joint Chiefs of Staff and Army definition consists of the "three interrelated fields of guerrilla warfare, evasion-and-escape, and subversion." Part I of this bibliography (the present volume) encompasses these three fields; Part II (to be published later) will cover unclassified sources in the field variously labeled "counterguerrilla warfare," "counterinsurgency warfare," or "operations against irregular forces."

Inasmuch as the 400-odd entries in this volume were selected from over 1,800 entries in the SORO information storage system, the bibliography is not comprehensive. Rather, it presents a cross section of available literature on the various unconventional warfare subjects included. Because entries were selected to provide this cross sectional view, users of the volume can feel confident, after reading all of the sources referenced under any subject, that they have been exposed to a fairly complete picture of the understanding of the subject as it exists in the unclassified literature. It is anticipated that later SORO bibliographies of classified sources will complete the picture for qualified users with respect to important aspects of unconventional warfare activities which, primarily because they are clandestine in nature, tend to be written about only in classified documents.

Organization of the Bibliography - Part I

Part I of the bibliography is divided into eight sections. Each section is briefly described below in terms of its central topic or subject.

Section I - History (Pages 1-7)

Unconventional warfare, particularly guerrilla warfare, is not a modern 20th century invention, but has a notable history. Entries in this section include references to recently published historical accounts of guerrilla warfare, as well as to some existing materials published in the past on guerrilla warfare or closely related subjects. Generally speaking, entries are restricted to unconventional warfare in pre-World War I time periods.

Section II - Background and Setting (Pages 9-12)

The causes of unconventional warfare--as with any form of warfare--are complex and varied. Generally, this bibliography is focused on the waging of unconventional warfare, in the event that the conflict has begun. However, the few entries presented in this section deal with background causes and the environmental context in which the battle is fought. These are included because of the necessity for understanding such factors--political, economic, social--if unconventional warfare is to be successfully waged or defeated.

Section III - Strategy and Theory (Pages 13-27)

Entries in this section deal with the general rationale of the use of unconventional warfare--doctrinal strategy and theory--as it is authoritatively presented by leading exponents of its use. Emphasis of most of the entries is on the political-military values, as well as the general objectives, of this type of warfare. The entries are categorized into the following subsections according to the country whose rationale is discussed or presented in the article:

- (1) United States and Allied Nations (Pages 13-20)
- (2) Soviet Union (Pages 21-23)
- (3) Communist China (Pages 24-26)
- (4) Cuba (Page 27).

Section IV - Operational Concepts (Pages 29-44)

Operational tactics and techniques of employment of unconventional forces are the major concern of entries in this section. Tactical principles, such as secrecy, surprise, and mobility, are covered, as well as the operations--such as ambush and sabotage--involved in specific tasks. Entries are categorized into the following subject subsections:

- (1) General Operational Concepts (Pages 29-33)
- (2) Subversion, Including Underground Resistance (Pages 34-38)
- (3) Tactics of Ambush, Assassination, Sabotage, and Terror (Pages 39-42)
- (4) Escape and Evasion (Pages 43 and 44).

Section V - Organization, Selection, Training, and Logistical Support (Pages 45-52)

Administrative problems--stemming from the unique requirements posed by both the strategy and theory of its use and the operational concepts employed--associated with an unconventional warfare capability differ somewhat from those of conventional warfare forces. Entries in this section deal with the special kinds of problems involved in establishing and maintaining an effective unconventional warfare effort.

Section VI - Legal Status of Unconventional Warfare Belligerents (Pages 53 and 54)

International law has not ignored the legal status of unconventional warfare belligerents, but neither is their status completely defined and consistently interpreted. The nature of this form of warfare, particularly in terms of civilian and nonuniformed participants, poses legal and humanitarian problems unlike those encountered in conventional warfare. Entries in this section are focused on this aspect of the law of international conflict.

Section VII - Campaigns and Actions in Major Geographical Areas from World War II to the Present (Pages 55-112)

Most entries in the preceding sections deal with particular aspects or functions of unconventional warfare as central topics of analysis or study. Actual accounts of many different experiences are frequently used to illustrate principles or concepts, or as the "hidden" basis for generalizations or viewpoints about unconventional warfare. In this section, emphasis shifts from concentration on a given subject to a more complete picture of unconventional warfare as it has occurred in various parts of the world, primarily since 1940. Entries are primarily expository or narrative accounts of single wars, campaigns, or actions--how they were fought, who fought them, and what was achieved. Because the nature of unconventional warfare varies from area to area as a function of factors in a particular situation such as the people, the geographical terrain, and the level of technological development of the area, entries are categorized into subsections according to major geographical areas. To facilitate finding references to activities in a particular country within an area, entry numbers are grouped by country at the beginning of each subsection on a major geographical area.

- (1) Europe Overall (Pages 55 and 56)
- (2) Western Europe (Pages 57-65)
- (3) Central and Eastern Europe (Pages 66-72)
- (4) Southern Europe (Pages 73-79)
- (5) Soviet Union (Pages 80-86)
- (6) Southwest Asia (Pages 87 and 88)
- (7) South Asia (Pages 89-102)
- (8) East Asia (Pages 103-108)
- (9) Africa (Pages 109-111)
- (10) Middle and South America (Page 112).

Section VIII - Listing of Relevant Army Field Manuals (Page 113)

Authoritative Army concepts and doctrine can be found in the manuals listed in this section of the bibliography. For qualified Army users, field manuals can be obtained through regularly established administrative channels. Other interested persons may purchase unclassified manuals from the Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C.

How to Use the Bibliography

The bibliography has been organized so that a reference, or set of references, can be found in a number of different ways, depending upon the information the user already has and the nature of the information he wishes to obtain.

1. Author Index

If the reader wishes to find an article (or articles) by a person whose name he knows, the simplest way of finding the article is to use the author index. Authors, as well as some familiar organizations, are listed alphabetically. Next to each author's name are the entry numbers of the references he has written or edited. (All entries in the bibliography have been numbered consecutively from the beginning to the end of the bibliography; thus each entry has a single identification number.) Entries are listed by an author, whether as senior or junior author, for all his references in the bibliography.

2. Subject Classification

As described in a preceding part of this Introduction, references have been classified into eight major sections. If the user wishes to find information about a particular topic he should first peruse the table of contents to see if the subject of his interest is one of the sections or sub-section headings. If that is unsuccessful, he should reread the preceding section in this Introduction on organization of the bibliography, where the content matter in each section is briefly discussed, to see if the subject of his interest is subsumed under a different title.*

Next, the user may refer to additional entries in the bibliography which are identified by entry number at the end of the list of entries for several of the subject classifications. These sources, while containing information on the subjects under which they are identified by number only, were judged to contain more relevant information for some other subject classification. To avoid voluminous duplication, a source reference and annotation is printed only once in the bibliography under the subject classification to which it was judged most relevant; its entry number only is given as a cross reference under other subjects which it also covers.

Finally, the user may look over the entries in the section or subsection whose title seems logically to be most closely related to the subject of his interest (e.g., look for references to operational details of guerrilla raids or interdiction under the subsection in which ambush is listed in the general section labeled Operational Concepts).

3. Research Key

If the user has not been able to find the particular reference, or set of references, he is seeking through use of the above techniques, the Research Key printed in Appendix B may be used. Although primarily designed for research use through automated selection of machine-stored information, the key can be used manually with this printed bibliography.

*For user convenience, the section title of pages within sections appears in capital letters at the top of left-hand (even-numbered) pages and the subsection title, when appropriate, appears at the top of right-hand (odd-numbered) pages.

Each reference has been categorized according to the 55-category key. The numbers printed next to each entry in the right-hand column of each bibliography page refer to the Research Key categories. Thus, the user may identify those entries which have been categorized as containing information on the particular topic in which he has a special interest (within the limits of the categories used in the key). For example, entries which have the number 47 printed next to the annotation in the right-hand column contain information about area control operations. In addition, the categories can be used in combination: entries having number 3, number 11, and number 47 contain information on area control operations in Malaya during the post-World War II time period.*

Important Facts about this Bibliography

Selection Criteria

As mentioned in a preceding part of this Introduction, the 400-odd entries in this bibliography were selected from over 1,800 entries in the SORO information storage system. With the overall objective of presenting a cross section of available literature on the topics of concern, entries were selected which met one or more of the following criteria (no one entry meets all): the entry is considered by many to be a "classic" in the field; the entry represents a unique viewpoint or account on a topic (not necessarily a sound one by U.S. doctrinal standards); the entry should be relatively easy to obtain by military activities; the level of treatment of subject within the entry should be reasonably understandable, and not esoteric or unduly obscure.

*Code numbers 56 and 57 next to an entry are to be ignored by the user; those numbers were used for research purposes not pertinent to the Research Key in Appendix B.

The system being used at SORO is described in two publications. Condit, D.M., A System for Handling Data on Unconventional Warfare (U) Including a Bibliography of Open Sources. Chevy Chase, Md.: The Johns Hopkins University, Operations Research Office, May 1956 (ORO-T-339). Condit, D.M., Methodological Considerations in the Application of a Machine System to Special Warfare Bibliographies. Unpublished Manuscript, The American University, Special Operations Research Office, April 1960.

One net result of employing these criteria is that no attempt has been made to "spoon-feed" the user with a particular doctrinal viewpoint or philosophy. Conflicting views will be encountered from one entry to another on a topic; for example, some Communist views are included. The decision to so provide a variety of views was taken for three reasons: first, the field of unconventional warfare has not been systematically studied enough by the United States to allow such a fixed doctrinal structure; second, it was assumed that the potential users of the bibliography will have the maturity of judgment which allows them to separate sound information from unsound among those entries on the subject of their particular interest, without imposed judgments by SORO regarding the political or military orientation of the author, or the overall viewpoint which his material represents; third, a prescreening on the basis of "friend or foe" would exclude information considered valuable on potential enemy strategy and philosophy, as well as on operational concepts useful to U.S. purposes.

- A second result of providing a representative cross section of the literature in the bibliography, rather than attempting to select articles on some pre-defined standards of viewpoint, is important to mention. Undoubtedly, some references already known to the user and judged by him as particularly good expressions of a viewpoint, theory, operational concept, or tactic have not been included. SORO would appreciate correspondence from users who feel that such an omission is particularly critical. The correspondence will be most helpful if it briefly explains how the addition of the reference will provide information not already provided in other references in the bibliography, or why the omitted reference provides a better exposition of a viewpoint than is provided by the reference already included.

Information Contained in Entries

Each entry contains three classes of information:

- (1) Identification and Location Information

(2) Summary Statement about Contents

(3) Research Key Code Numbers

Identification and Location Information. The first part of each entry gives the name of the author(s), the title of the article, and identifies the publishing house, periodical, or organization which published the article, including the date of publication.

Summary Statement about Contents. The second part of each entry is a brief statement by the SORO reviewer of the referenced material as to the focus of its contents. This is not an abstract or an annotation; the amount of space on each machine storage "plate," which can be used for the summary statement, is very limited. Consequently, it is not possible to summarize the contents; rather, the aim is to characterize the book's contents in as brief and comprehensive a way as possible.* (The Research Key used in the SORO storage system is the primary means of describing contents.)

Research Key Code Numbers. As described in a preceding part of this Introduction, the numbers printed next to each entry in the right-hand column of the page, refer to information contained in the entry as categorized according to the Research Key found in Appendix B.

*The user should ignore comments frequently found at the end of an entry's summary statement, such as Useful, or Pertinent. These comments were made for a research purpose other than the preparation of this bibliography. Likewise, some of the summary statements will be very brief and, in view of where they are classified in the bibliography, contain only redundant information (e.g., an article classified under Strategy and Theory may be characterized as "Deals largely with theory.") The summary statements were originally prepared for research purposes and were designed primarily to aid visual scanning of storage system entries by researchers. Entry plates are not stored in the SORO system according to the classification system used in this report; visual scanning of printed read-outs of entries is frequently necessary and useful.

Ground Rules of Classification

More often than not, source materials referenced in the bibliography treat more than one topic. In these instances, a problem arose as to which topic the entry should be classified under. The problem was resolved in each instance by making a judgment to classify the entry under the topic to which it appeared primarily applicable. The entry then was cross-referenced by entry number under other applicable topics in Sections III, IV, and V.

Sections I, II, VI, VII and VIII were not appropriate to cross-reference in this way. The user will find that most entries in Section VII deal with the full range of topics about a given campaign or action. In those instances in which this is not true, the title of the reference usually indicates the specific topic being treated.

A. United States and Allied Nations

42. Amery, Julian. "Of Resistance," THE NINETEENTH CENTURY, 145 (Mar 1949), 138-49. Excellent general discussion of the political, social, and economic aspects of unconventional warfare. Some comparison of Russian and Allied techniques. Pertinent. 2, 3, 6, 7, 11, 14, 15, 19, 23, 28, 29, 30, 31, 33, 34, 36, 37, 40, 47, 51, 55.
43. Atkinson, James D. "American Military Policy and Communist Unorthodox Warfare," MARINE CORPS GAZETTE, 42 (Jan 1958), 21-25. Brief general discussion. Author argues that development of nuclear weapons has increased importance of unconventional warfare. Pertinent. 2, 3, 5, 7, 11, 14, 15, 18, 19, 21, 37, 40, 48, 51, 57.
44. Atkinson, James D. THE EDGE OF WAR. Chicago: Henry Regnery, 1960. 318pp. Index. See esp. pp. 123-265 for unconventional warfare. Author includes propaganda, sabotage, subversion, political, economic, and guerrilla warfare as aspects of the "grey" zone between war and peace embraced by unconventional warfare. Excellent analyses. 2, 3, 5, 14, 16, 18, 19, 38, 40, 43, 44, 47, 48, 51, 52.
45. Bjelajac, Slavko [N]. "Unconventional Warfare in the Nuclear Era," ORBIS, 4 (Fall 1960), 323-37. Argues for a balanced strategy: limited reliance on nuclear striking power, supplemented by dependence on both conventional and unconventional tactics. Broad and extremely useful description of unconventional warfare. 2, 3, 19, 38, 40, 44, 48, 50, 51, 57.

STRATEGY AND THEORY

47. Downey, Edward F., Jr. "Theory of Guerrilla Warfare," MILITARY REVIEW, 39 (May 1959), 45-55. The author argues for the development of a unified theory of guerrilla warfare. Such warfare, in both its military and political aspects, is seen as the only practical response to a nuclear attack since it would constitute effective defense in depth. Good. 3, 5, 19.
48. Drysdale, (Lt. Col.) D.B. "Special Forces," MARINE CORPS GAZETTE, 38 (Jan 1954), 49-53. A persuasive argument for a special force-in-being to meet the urgencies of the next war. Reviews WWII work of special forces. 2, 19, 38, 41, 42, 45, 56.
49. Fisher, (Col.) Thomas L. II. "Limited War'--What Is It?" AIR UNIVERSITY QUARTERLY REVIEW, 9 (Winter 1957-58), 127-42. Defines "limited war" and inter-relationship of guerrilla warfare. Discusses Greece and Indochina as examples of guerrilla warfare within "limited war." 2, 3, 19.

UNITED STATES AND ALLIED NATIONS

50. Hanrahan, Gene Z. "Guerrilla Warfare," MARINE CORPS GAZETTE, 40 (Mar 1956), 26-31. Discusses political implications of the guerrilla warfare during World War II, arguing that our failure to recognize these aspects of guerrilla operations contributed to their resurgence in the present period. Also discusses the functions of U.S. Special Forces. 2, 3, 6, 14, 23, 33, 35, 38, 43, 46, 48, 50, 51, 53, 55.
51. Hargreaves, (Maj.) Reginald. "Thorn in the Flesh," MILITARY REVIEW, 41 (Jun 1961), 80-89. Explains that guerrilla forces will be needed when employing nuclear weapons; through examples, author lists necessary tactics and discusses why guerrilla forces should be trained now. 1, 2, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 25, 27, 28, 38, 41, 44, 57.
52. Heintz, (Lt. Col.) Robert D., Jr. "Small Wars -- Vanishing Art?" MARINE CORPS GAZETTE, 34 (Apr 1950), 22-25. Suggests that the Marine Corps be ready for independent operations, needs research into "modern partisan or commando actions" to develop new concepts of doctrine and organization. 19, 56.
53. Kelly, George A. "Revolutionary War and Psychological Action," MILITARY REVIEW, 40 (Oct 1960), 4-13. Explicates the philosophical bases for current French controversies on the conduct of the Algerian War: can the use of Communist techniques--terror, torture, persuasion, manipulation, and compulsion--by Western powers be morally justified? Good. 3, 8, 17, 19, 37, 40, 41, 42, 48, 49, 51, 55, 57.

STRATEGY AND THEORY

54. Kinard, (Col.) Wm. J., Jr. "This is Special Warfare U.S. Army Style," ARMY INFORMATION DIGEST, (June 1960), 2-11. The task of special warfare is to extend ground battle deep into enemy's lines (unconventional warfare), and inflict psychological as well as physical damage on the enemy (psychological warfare). Excellent view of both areas.

"Irregular Warfare," MILITARY REVIEW,
37 (Dec 1957), 87-89. Dig. from article in AIR POWER (GB) (Winter 1956-57).
Author argues that destructiveness of modern weapons emphasizes irregular warfare and that such tactics are successful when used in conjunction with conventional forces.
67. Troxel, (Maj. Gen.) Orlando C. Jr. 3, 19, 20.
"Special Warfare--A New Appraisal,"

AUTHOR INDEX

Authors are listed alphabetically according to the first letters of their last names. The number(s) next to the author's name refers to bibliographic entry number (not page number). Included in the Author Index are articles having no identified author. In such instances, the title of each article is listed in its appropriate alphabetical position in the index. In some instances, entries are also listed by organization (e.g., Society for Investigation of Human Ecology). The military rank of an author is designated as it was at the time of the publication of his work.
